SOCIETY OF MEDICAL MEN OF LONDON

OF THE

SOCIETY

FOR THE

RELIEF

OF

WIDOWS and ORPHANS

OF

MEDICAL MEN,

IN

LONDON,

AND ITS

VICINITY.

INSTITUTED

A. D. M,DCC,LXXXVIII.

TH E vicissitudes of human life are daily felt, and universally acknowledged.— With the fairest prospects of success, and even in the full enjoyment of health, man often falls a sacrifice to accident or disease, and leaves his family in circumstances of absolute or comparative distress.

Instances of this truth have occurred so repeatedly, that persons in particular situations have been induced to form themselves into Societies, for the purpose of raising funds, that might obviate, or lessen, the consequences of such melancholy events.

To this laudable motive the Society for the Relief of the Widows and Orphans of the Clergy owes its establishment ; and, with the same benevolent intention, similar associations have been formed by men of other professions. The number of objects, whose necessities have been relieved, affords the most ample testimony of the utility of such institutions ; while the encouragement they have received, from persons not immediately interested, is an unequivocal proof of their estimation in the public opinion.

It is remarkable that Medical Men, in this metropolis, should have been so long inattentive to the benefit, which their families might derive, from a well-regulated establishment of this kind. The opinion of the world, discountenancing Celibacy in them, is a cause why there is proportionally a greater number married in this, than in any other class. The expences attending their education, with the obstacles which render a productive establishment in business slow and precarious, often prevent them from making an early provision for

for their families. If to these circumstances it be added that they are, from the nature of their profession, particularly exposed to contagion and other causes of disease, more need not be urged, to enforce the necessity of promoting some scheme, to alleviate the distress to which their families may be liable, when deprived, by death, of the protection and support of a Husband or a Father.

This Society is formed to raise and establish a fund for such purposes.

Young professional men, reflecting upon the uncertainty of life and of success, will naturally find comfort, in the consideration of its being in their power, at a small annual expence, to lessen the miseries, to which their wives and children may be exposed, after their decease. Such as are enabled to bequeath wealth to those whom they may leave behind them, will have an opportunity of testifying their gratitude to that profession, in which it has

has been acquired, by contributing some part of it to the relief of the families of their less fortunate brethren :—And others, not of the profession, who are benevolently disposed, will, by means of this establishment, have it in their power to exercise their humanity, by contributing to the relief of those who were entitled to indulge better expectations.

IF this institution had been founded upon the principles of a Society for the benefit of Survivors, it could not have answered fully the proposed benevolent intention ; for then it must have had a termination ; whereas it is meant to be perpetual.—Or, if it had been formed upon the General Plan of Annuity Societies, the benefits might have fallen in many cases to Widows and Children not in want of assistance ; and in others, relief could not have been proportioned to the degree of real Distress, which is the object of this Society.
